A chance discovery of a sepia photograph of her grandmother and her twin sister leads RCMP Constable Arabella Dryvynsydes on an investigation: how did a picture taken in 1914 in the mining town of Extension, B.C. end up at a garage sale in rural Saskatchewan almost one hundred years later?

As Arabella sifts through long-forgotten letters and buried memories, she unearths heartbreaking truths of her family history – and in the process also resolves a century-old murder.

In her debut novel, Dey skillfully moves back and forth between two time periods and two memorably resourceful heroines, each of whom must rise to challenges the other could never imagine.

Rich detail and evocative prose. A magic mirror of a novel in which the past reflects the present.
